[Education] Slenker, Elmina. Little Lessons for Little Folks. Liberal, Mo.: G.H. Walser, 1883. 152 p.

No other copy known. UVa has an 1887 edition, printed in New York. A rare example of freethought children's literature, from the radical author Elmina Slenker (1827-1908?) and published by the founder of the freethought colony of Liberal; according to Slenker's preface (printed on a leaf tipped in after the title), the lessons "were written at the request of the Sunday Instruction School Superintendent at Liberal-- simply for her to read to her pupils and make explanations and comments thereon. But the scarcity of books for the young that are written from a Liberal or scientific standpoint, and are devoid of allusions to a god as the creator and designer of all that is, has induced me to offer this volume to the parents and guardians of the girls and boys under their care, who will one day be our future leaders of thought and investigation." Certainly, Slenker's explanation of the pagan origins of Easter (cast in language suitable for children) indicates the general thrust of the work, though there is also much on natural history and the like. The preface notes "Should the sales of the present volume warrant the publication of another one, I hope sometime to be able to give it to you." A follow-up volume evidently never appeared, though this work was reprinted in 1887.

Silverton, Oregon: Printed and Published by the Torch of Reason and to be had its office, 1899. 29 p. Unopened.

Unrecorded. The only copy? An address from the American positivist and a scarce relic of an ambitious West-coast freethought experiment. Wakeman took a position as a professor at Liberal University and would eventually become president of this short-lived radical college in Silverton; the institution, which folded around 1902, was done in by the diversity of secular views among the founders and professors, who ranged from free love activists to more traditional moralists who simply wished to reject Christianity.

[Fiction] Holley, William Victor. Heroes of Peace: A Story of the Twentieth Century Revolution. St. Louis: The Commercial Publishing Co., 1900. [iv], 311 p.

Armed revolution on a small scale in 20th-century America (at least one factory is blown up), the forces of labor unions take on those of the corrupt industrial trusts; the party of labor eventually wins out, though the party of wealth does not go easily into defeat: "Could he see the 'dinner pail brigades' marching behind the carriage of their Leader? No. He would not." Noted in the OCLC record as a juvenile title, though this seems somewhat implausible given the subject matter and the handling of the plot. Not found in Wright; not noted in Sargent, British and American Utopian Literature.

Describes a remarkable sandstone and rock out-cropping near Litomerice, a town in northern Bohemia in today's Czech Republic. This highly unusual geological formation—very beautifully illustrated on the folding handcolored engraved plate—inspired many artists and poets. Medieval residents left complex stone carvings on the face of the outcropping (illustrated on the folding lithographed plate). The final lithographed plate depicts "Schloss Birkstein."

[Juveniles] Bell, Solomon. Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi. Boston: Gray & Bowen, 1830. 162p.

The first American juvenile book on the trans-Mississippi region, giving account of its early explorers, Indian tribes, and other features; the expeditions covered are those of Lewis and Clark (comprising pp. 11-105) and Stephen H. Long, and the captivity among the Indians of Nootka Sound of John Jewitt. The double-page map, copyrighted by S.G. Goodrich, is noted by Wheat as “A copy (much simplified) of 1822 Tanner”; it covers the western half of North America, from southern California to Vancouver Island, including Mexico. The text also includes numerous woodcut illustrations. Bell is a pseudonym for William Joseph Snelling (1804-1848), who was born in Boston and began his working life as an explorer, trapper and fur trader in what is now Minnesota. His five years out west enabled him to become well acquainted with native American life. Snelling returned to Boston in 1828, leading a varied career as a newspaper journalist, essayist, poet and, eventually, hack writer. [Manuscripts] Lowell Press Archives, 1913-1993.

The Lowell Press was active in Kansas City from 1913-1994. Established by S.K. Lowell, the Lowell Press was expanded and maintained by three generations of the family. Arthur E. Lowell, the son of the founder, joined the firm in 1925; Payson W. Lowell, Arthur's son, joined the company in 1955. Lowell Press handled everything from small job printing in Kansas City to major national productions such as The Hereford Journal. In addition to its commercial work, the Lowell Press was one of the most distinguished publishers of books on Western history in the 20th century, with over 100 titles to its credit, including Bell Ranch as I Knew It (1973) and Tallgrass Prairie: The Inland Sea (1978). Lowell Press books won numerous awards for their historical accuracy as well as their graphic design. Included among the Lowell Press records are correspondence and production files for each book. In addition to business files and financial records, the Lowell Press collection includes comprehensive samples of the output of the press, from ephemeral brochures to books. Also of interest are numerous photographs, providing a visual record of the evolution of printing technology. Payson W. Lowell has also donated his personal library on the graphic arts, a collection of several hundred works, including type specimen books and long runs of journals. The Lowell Press collection will be useful for scholars interested in the history of commercial printing, book production, regional publishing, and the graphic arts. Gift of Payson Lowell, 2006.

[Poetry] Freligh, John Simmons. Poems. St. Louis: Printed by Charles & Hammond, Book and Job Printers, 1852. 163 p.

According to the preface, the volume was intended "as a gift-book and tribute of respect for my particular friends and a few others. . . . A few surplus copies only will be sold." Collected verses of a man who had evidently relocated at an early date from upstate New York to St. Louis, and who had gone from keeping a school (he includes elegies on dead scholars) to banking. Freligh (1804-1856) includes holiday poems addressed to his friends back in Mechanicville, occasional verses for a supper at the State Tobacco Warehouse in St. Louis in 1844, a jocular early piece from ca. 1831 to the women of St. Louis, and a satirical piece on music that makes passing mention of a St. Louis penny paper: "There's music in old Sambo Gosh, / When he sings 'My Long-Tail'd Blue,' / And there's music every morning / In the 'People's Organ' too." (Three extracts from 1850s newspapers, printing examples of Freligh's lyrics, mounted in the rear blanks and rear free endpapers.)

[Wyoming] The Cheyenne of To-Day. Cheyenne, Wyoming: The Industrial Club, [ca. 1915?].

[Wyoming] Downey, Stephen W. Letter on Native Soda Deposits near Laramie City, Wyoming Territory, to the Superintendent of the Census. Laramie: Laramie Sentinel Print, 1880. 4p.

Wyoming (Territory). Governor (John M. Thayer). Message of Governor Thayer to the Fourth Legislative Assembly, of Wyoming Territory, Convened at Cheyenne, November 2nd, 1875. Cheyenne: H. Glafcke, Printer, Daily Leader Office, 1875. 25, [1 blank] pp.

Adams, Herd 2289: "Rare." AII (Wyoming) 24. Eberstadt 168:536: "Discusses cattle rustling and other cattle-trade problems; Wyoming's mineral resources; Indian incursions; failure of the Black Hills Commission, but now that the richness of the mines is established, 'the miners will go into the Hills and into Northern Wyoming next spring in large numbers.'" Stopka, Wyoming Territorial Imprints 1875.8. Numerous areas deal with stock issues, touching on such problems as stock stealing, diseases, and increase of the stock industry. The governor, however, realizing that man cannot live by beef alone, proposes measures to increase the presence of fish in the territory's streams.

Wyoming (Territory). Governor (John M. Thayer). Message of Governor Thayer to the Fifth Legislative Assembly, of Wyoming Territory, Convened at Cheyenne, November 6, 1877. Cheyenne: H. Glafcke, Printer, Daily Leader Office, 1877. 15,[1] p.

Wyoming (Territory). Governor (John W. Hoyt). Message of Governor Hoyt to the Sixth Legislative Assembly, of Wyoming Territory, Convened at Cheyenne, November 4, 1879. Cheyenne: Leader Steam Book and Job Printing House, 1879. 94 pp. Original fuchsia glazed printed wrappers, stitched (as issued).

Adams, Herd 1085: "Scarce." AII (Wyoming) 48. Eberstadt 128:577: "The governor gives an interesting resume of territorial achievements, such as the recent quelling of Indian incursions, the introduction of 300,000 head of cattle and 200,000 head of sheep, the mineral discoveries in the Wind River, Seminole, Medicine Bow, and Laramie mountain regions; the cattle route through the Crow Reservation and consequent difficulties; Indian raids; road agents; and the incoming emigration." Stopka, Wyoming Territorial Imprints 1879.8.

Hoyt reports on the grazing interests in the Territory and "Embarrassment [sic] to the Stock Interest from the Demands of the Crow Indians." In a section entitled "The Grazing Interest," he comments on several problems affecting ranchers, such as grass fires, disputed brands, and contagious cattle diseases. Not necessarily a servant of the livestock interests, he also remarks that undervaluing livestock is a favorite way to evade taxes and proposes remedies.

[Wyoming] Centennial Gold Mining Company of Wyoming Territory. Superintendent's Report. October 10th, 1877. [Laramie]: Laramie Sentinel, 1877. 13 p.

Takes the form of a letter from N.M. Ambrose, superintendent of mining operations, to Stephen W. Downey, president of the company.

Wyoming Improvement Company. Wyoming, the Pennsylvania of the West. Railroads Now Opening up This Wonderful Territory. A Fertile Agricultural Country. Fifteen Thousand Square Miles of Rich Oil Fields....Bessemer, A Great Railroad, Manufacturing, and Industrial Centre Just Starting Up.... Geneva, Nebraska: Published by Wyoming Improvement Company, C. Shickley, Secretary, n.d. [ca. 1888]. 28, [4] pp. Laid in (probably as issued): (1) Printed letter from Shickley on stationery of Wyoming Improvement Company touting the pamphlet; (2) map outlined in green, proposed and existing railroad routes in red: Map of Wyoming, 1888, accompanying "Resources of Wyoming." Published by Wyoming Improvement Co., Geneva Nebraska [below neat line] Rand, McNally & Co....Copyright 1888.... 42 x 57.3 cm; (3) uncolored town plan: Bessemer, Carbon County, Wyoming. The Gateway to the Pacific. The Future Metropolis, Great Manufacturing City and Capital of Wyoming...[blurb on Yellowstone at left]. 32.5 x 53.3 cm. Original grey pictorial wrappers illustrating majestic Wyoming scenery, stapled as issued (spine neatly replaced with sympathetic paper).

Decker 22:471. Although supposedly promoting the entirety of Wyoming, this publication in fact is mostly a promotional for the proposed town of Bessemer, which failed to prosper and is now a ghost town. The majority of the pamphlet promotes the mineral and oil resources of the Territory. Some ads at the rear include maps.
