Academic Supervisor for Congressional Internships

I served as the academic supervisor for students interning for Members of Congress for 3 – 6 credits. The academic course I designed combined career development skills and a major capstone research project that required students to use participant observation, conduct interviews with staff members, and integrate assigned academic readings and theories to analyze their Member’s congressional behavior. In addition, working with the School of Public Affairs advisors, I standardized the internship contract, evaluations, and other forms to stream-line administration.

Courses Taught in the Washington Semester Program (2001 – 2006)

American Politics

Public Law

Women and Public Policy/Gender and Politics

The Washington Semester Program provides college students from all over the country the opportunity to spend an intensive “semester abroad” in Washington, DC, taking seminars, interning, and conducting field research in an experiential learning environment. These courses consisted of 2 four-credit seminars, exploring the general theme of “how Washington works” in the particular subject area. In the first seminar, students developed a working knowledge of important concepts, theories, and authors, and participated in a variety of class activities, including campaign simulations, moot courts, a gender “media-watch” assignment, and designing and conducting a “Washington Semester Public Opinion Poll.” For the second seminar, I was responsible for creating a speaker series, coordinating 40-50 policy professionals per semester. Speakers included Members of Congress, Supreme Court justices, interest group leaders, political consultants, national party leaders, and journalists.

Internship Academic Advisor: Students did a 4-credit internship that had both a professional and academic component. I designed assignments that integrated their internships into our classroom seminars, applying theory to practice, and helped students with professional development skills, such as creating resumes, interviewing, and networking.

Undergraduate Research Project: Students engaged in original research on the topic of their choice to complete a 4-credit independent research project. The purpose of the project was for students to produce a manuscript that could be presented at a professional conference or used as a senior honors thesis. Approximately half of the students I supervised did quantitative work. Three of my students won the Washington Semester Best Paper Award.
